

Seasons without me and my dog was barking at a stranger.

Seasons without me. Only
spring breathes, heavy and green, landing on branches.
My dog was a baby then,
burying his wet nose into the new green,
leaving small damp promises
on the brown dirt.

Seasons without me. Only
the sun is a bright, humming needle.
Cicadas shatter, dying for seventeen years of Patience. My dog was a handsome boy,
his smile lit the whole day.
Jumped and ran and had so much fun.

Seasons without me. Only leaves fall, rain drop. And my dog was Barking. At the doorway
where a stranger stood.
He unbuttoned his skin. Looked up and through me.
As if I were there.

Now it's winter, I suppose.
My dog shall forget
Me. & Snow shall paint the trees
White. & I shall unlearn the weight of My name. And my dog will Bark at the void.

Seasons without me and my dog was barking at a stranger.

Seasons without me. Only
spring breathes, heavy and green, landing on branches.
My dog was a baby then,
burying his wet nose into the new green,
leaving small damp promises
on the brown dirt.

Seasons without me. Only
the sun is a bright, humming needle.
Cicadas shatter, dying for seventeen years of Patience. My dog was a handsome boy,
his smile lit the whole day.
Jumped and ran and had so much fun.

Seasons without me. Only
leaves fall, rain drop. And my dog was Barking. At the doorway
where a stranger stood.
He unbuttoned his skin. Looked up and through me.
As if I were there.

Now it's winter, I suppose.
My dog shall forget
Me. & Snow shall paint the trees
White. & I shall unlearn the weight of
My name. And my dog will Bark at the void.

i say let's go see the fucking sea. us see the fucking sea.

personal unavoidable

oblivious

when i hear the clock strike that night you stood by me holding a camera, enduring the terrible lighting &

the desire to get naked and drown in water

i know you don't give a fuck

lit a cigarette

extinguished on skin

ashes poisoned a butterfly. knowing it's bad for your lungs, bad for me &

for all the physical existence on planet Earth dark tumors growing inside you, clustering, thriving, staying alive & taking your own life,

the most joyful part of your psychological mind

did you capture anything you liked that night? no.

but the flame went blind, then the chaos

touched my collarbone

and i felt

the closest moment of seeing god (or whatever superior exists), is falling, willingly

and you will know, this life is fucked up and you will be so happy

you will be so, so happy. you.

as you have never been before

That was the last day of summer.
By the wooden house was the playground. And we were kids who just turned 18. Being bright and shine and free, before Gravity. The greatest hunter, takes us down.

White little phantom,
paint the sky with baby blue, and be too young to verbalize the cooling wind through the hole.
Wild smile on its face, and suddenly,
caught by the moon. Frozen a nd dead.

Until the sharp spikes that rose from the roof
pierced into our hearts.
Until then we learned to look down.

Before
then I hadn't touched firearms.
See a house
burning, or lift
a life-heavy weight on the shoulder.
How we gather in the middle of the wild, or how we separate,
surrounded by the yellowish green, and whisper.

Slide prepared us, and a friend's hands held on the trampoline.
Hide-and-seek among the big pillars, chasing
the shadow of the one behind. With ferns as tall as us, summer-end type of smell. We don't know.
Anyone lost?

The last day of summer.

That was the last day of summer.
By the wooden house was the playground. And we were kids who just turned 18. Being bright and shine and free, before
Gravity. The greatest hunter, takes us down.

Slide prepared us, and a friend's hands held
on the trampoline.
Hide-and-seek among the big pillars, chasing
the shadow of the one behind. With ferns as tall as us, summer-end type of smell. We don't know.
Anyone lost?

Before then I hadn't touched firearms, seen a house burning, or lifted a life-heavy weight on the shoulder.
How we gather in the middle of the wild, or how we separate, surrounded by the yellowish green, and whisper.

White little phantom,
paint the sky with baby blue, and be too young to verbalize the cooling wind through the hole.
Wild smile on its face, and suddenly,
caught by the moon. Frozen and dead.

Until the sharp spikes that rose from the roof
pierced into our hearts.
Until then we learned to look down.

What would you think, if

someone called you up at 3,
and you don't know his name.

A whole series of drama dance in silent dark,
with blood gushing out from each scene,
with body left warm and unattended,
with blossom red in your hands.

You will ask.
Am I the killer, in this scripted crime?

What would you do when you sleep soundly in bed at 3 a.m. and wake up by the police?

Underneath the skin,
You must be falling into spring. The night park with tulips, broken pink in the green &
shadows of trees.

You hold the camera and sip the liquid of thriving peace.
And I'm still a human.

What would you think, if
a police officer politely informed you that Someone. Reported you for an attempt.

Is it a dream, or am I the one.

The killer is too good to be found, at least,
not by the stupid police.
Or anyone who once called them.

& the last line. Will always be solely,
breathe.

What would you do when you sleep soundly in bed at 3 a.m. and are woken up by police.

What would you think, if
someone called you up at 3,
and you don't know his name.

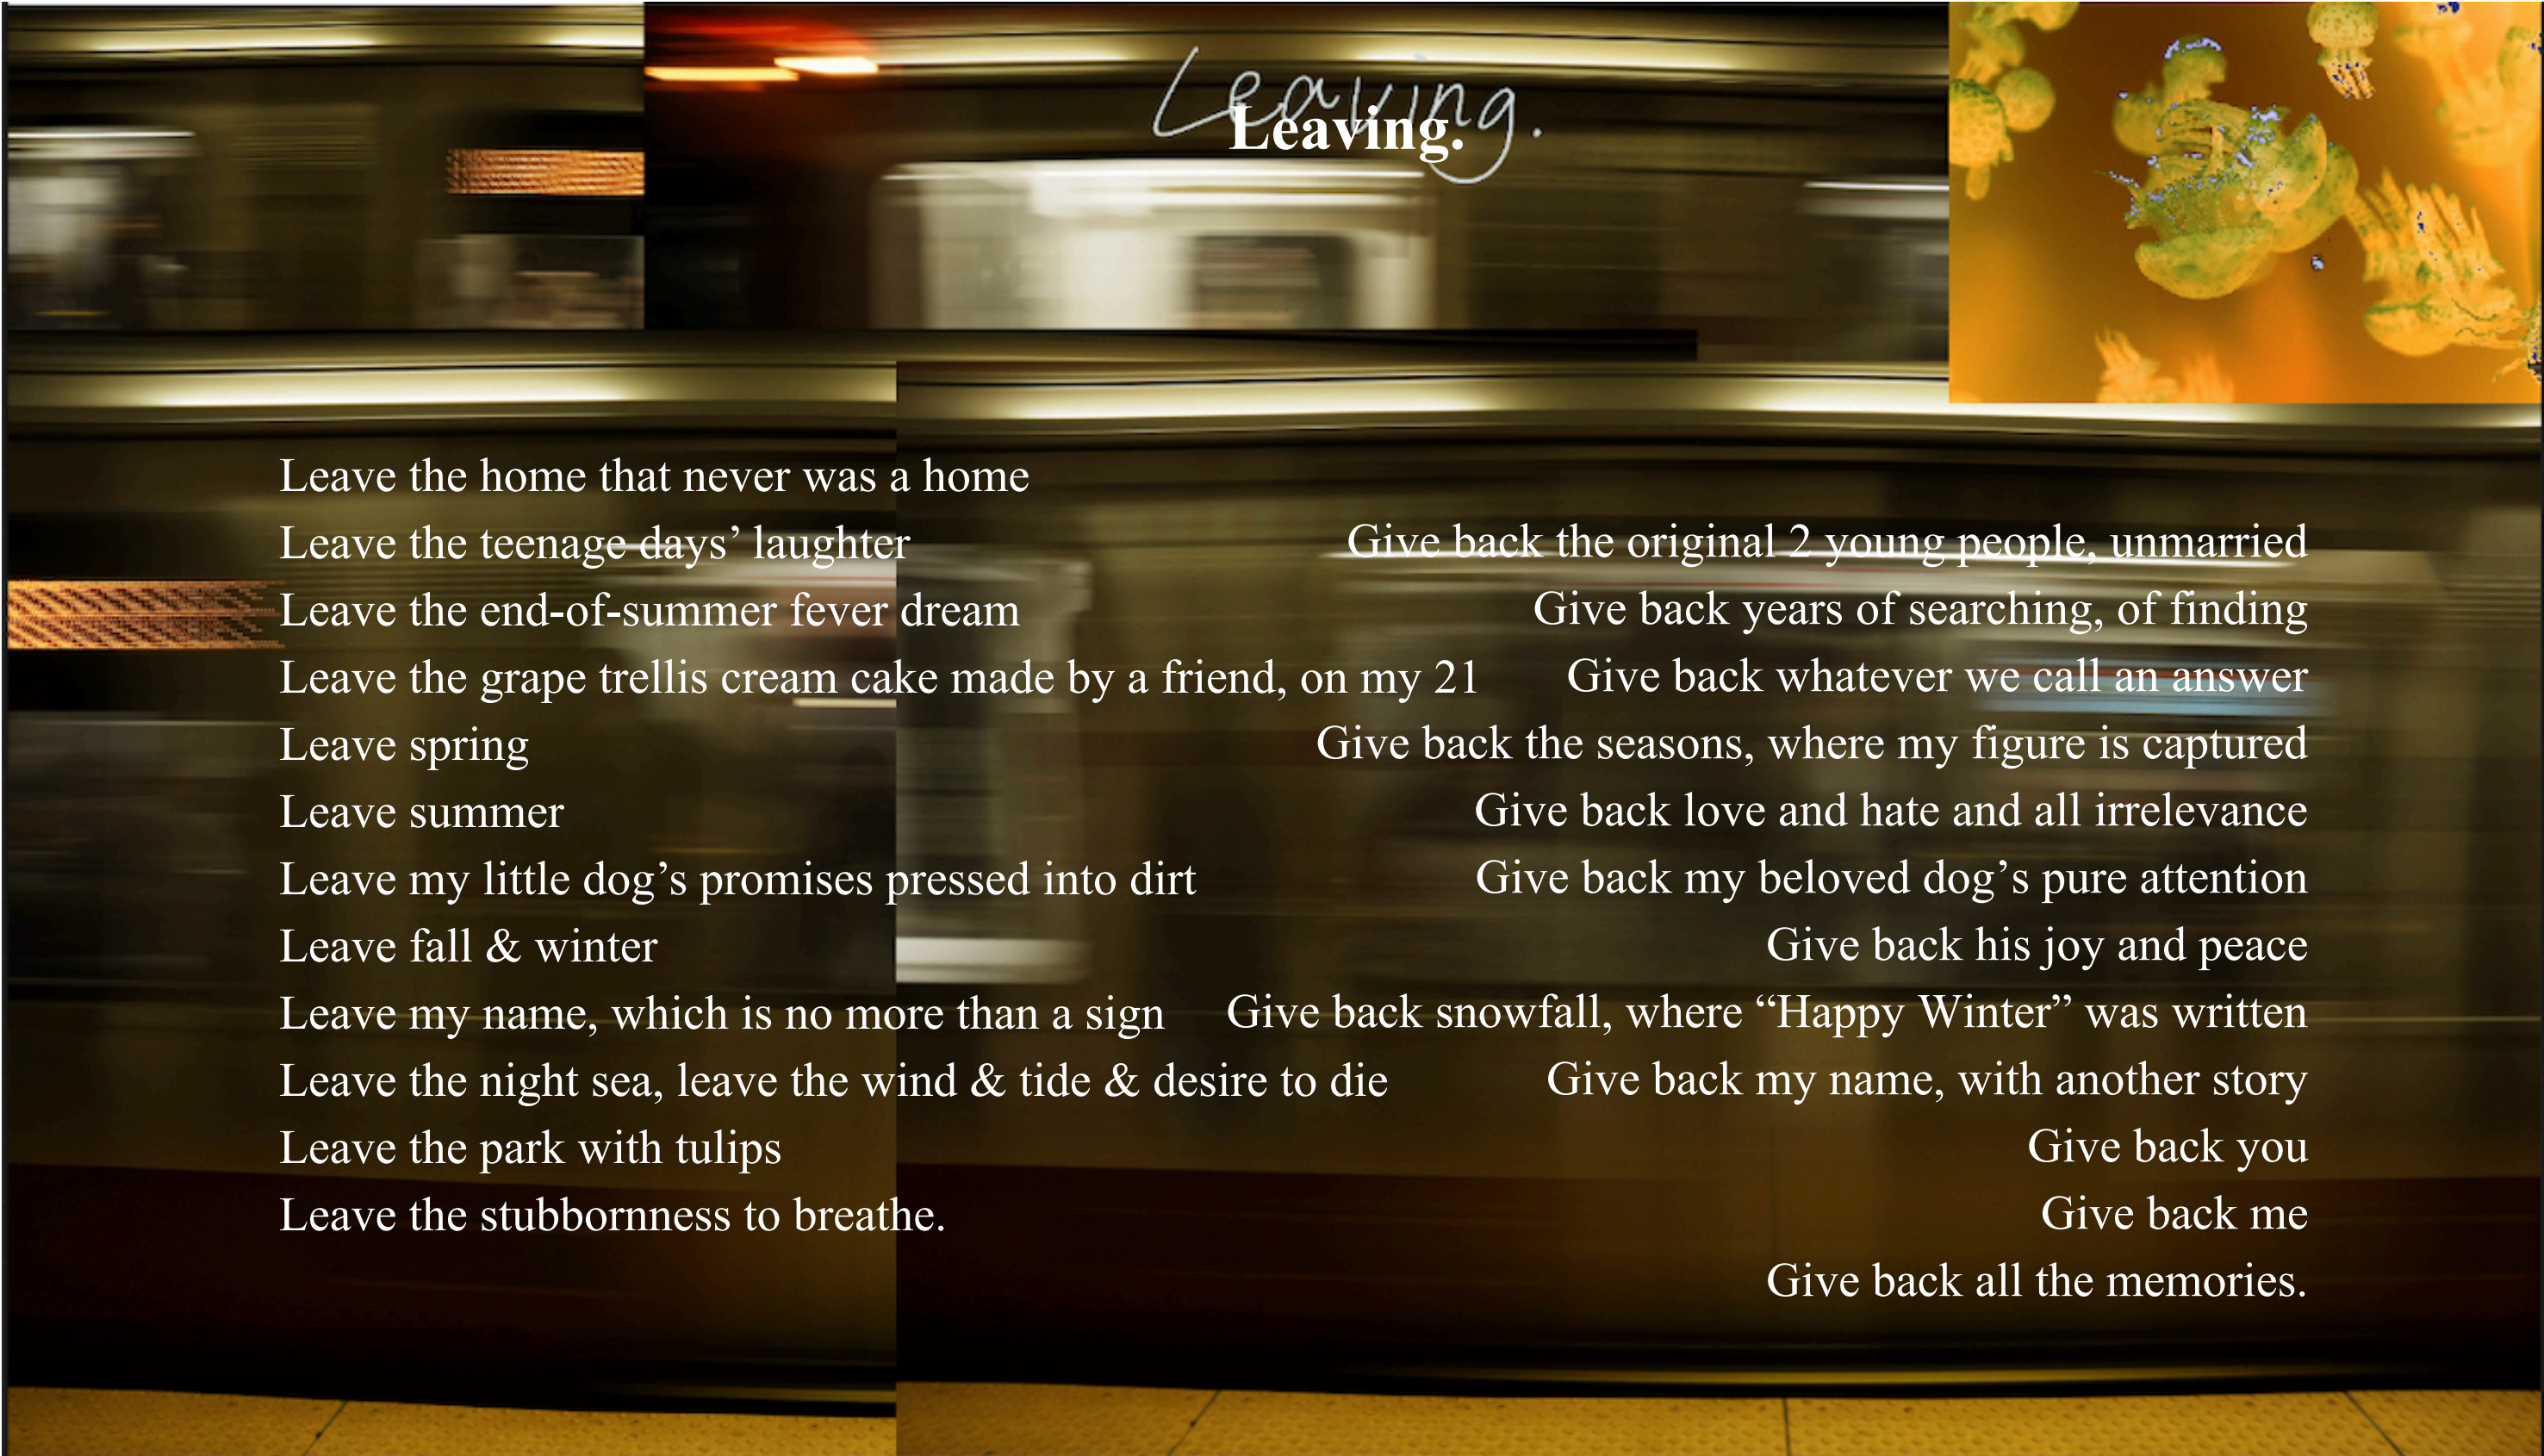

A whole series of drama dance in silent dark,
with blood gushing out from each scene,
with body left warm and unattended,
with blossom red in your hands.
You will ask.

Am I the killer, in this scripted crime?

What would you think, if
a police officer politely informed you that Someone. Reported you for
an attempt.
Is it a dream, or am I the one.

Underneath the skin, you must be falling into spring. The night park with tulips, broken pink in the green & shadows of trees.
You hold the camera and sip the liquid of thriving peace.
And I'm still a human.

The killer is too good to be found, at least,
not by the stupid police.
Or anyone who once called them.
& the last line. Will always be solely,
breathe.

Leaving.

Leave the home that never was a home

Leave the teenage days' laughter

Leave the end-of-summer fever dream

Leave the grape trellis cream cake made by a friend, on my 21

Leave spring

Leave summer

Leave my little dog's promises pressed into dirt

Leave fall & winter

Leave my name, which is no more than a sign

Leave the night sea, leave the wind & tide & desire to die

Leave the park with tulips

Leave the stubbornness to breathe.

Give back the original 2 young people, unmarried

Give back years of searching, of finding

Give back whatever we call an answer

Give back the seasons, where my figure is captured

Give back love and hate and all irrelevance

Give back my beloved dog's pure attention

Give back his joy and peace

Give back snowfall, where "Happy Winter" was written

Give back my name, with another story

Give back you

Give back me

Give back all the memories.